Convergent validity: the same trait measurements made by different methods correlate with each other. High and significant correlations will be expected.

Discriminant validity: different features measures by the same method exhibit low correlation in comparison with that shown by convergent validity. Low and non-significant correlations will be expected.

References